KHORAMSHAHR, Iran June 24 (Ageocies) — Militant Iranian Arabs attacked a police post south of this port city with machine guns and hand grenades Saturday night, causing considerable damage to the building hut no casualties, officials said Sunday.

The officials said the assailants fled soon after the attack. The incideot followed several days of Arab demonstrations and minor cases of arson in the Khoramsbahr area, where 37 people died in fighting at the start of this month between autonomy-seeking Arabs and government forces.

The local prosecutor-general claimed an Iraqi named Shahan al-Ogheli had heeo arrested after crossing the border illegally into Iran. He gave oo further details. Iranian Arabs staged anti-government demonstrations in Khoram-

German Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff said here Sunday the Iranian revolution has " brought forward" the danger of wars between nations seeking access to diminishing world oil supplies.

In an interview with " Arab News," Lambsdorff said Iran's decision to scale down oil production by one-third means that violent confrootations - " not between producers and consumers. but between consumers and coosumers" - might occur during the next five years.

Our projections on the risks of such wars between 1985 and 1990 were made before Iran, " be said, " and Iran has brought forward these dangers." Lambsdorff's remarks were made during a visit to Saudi Arabia with West German Foreigo Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher for talks on oil and the Middle East. The two ministers flew from Riyadh to Taif Sunday for meetings with King Khaled and Crown Prince Fahd before leaving for Bangkok. They are to attend a seven-nation summit meeting in Tokyo beginning Thursday that will discuss the world energy crisis.

The two German officials had a lengthy session Saturday evening with Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al-Faisal and Minister of Finance and National Economy Sheikh Muhammad Aba Al-Khail in which the Saudi position toward this week's OPEC conference in Geneva was discussed.

"Of course nobody likes oil price rises, but let's be realistic," Lamosdorff said. "There will be another oil price increase following the Geneva conference. The ide has told as they will be careful, and they have always beeo careful, but since Iran has lowered production by one-third they are not in as strong a position as they were before. The moderate position has lost some of its influence due to the reduction in the amount of production."

Israeli cabinet drops Weizman from autonomy discussions team

TEL AVIV, June 24 (Agencies) — Israel's cabinet dropped Defeose Minister Ezer Weizman from negotiations oo Palestinian autonomy Sunday, underlining his growing reservations about the hardline policies of Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

whole spectrum of Canada's Fellow- ministers granted Weizrelations with the Arah world and man's request for permission to his desire to develop them in the pull out of the delegation which Monday resumes discussion on autonomy with Egypt and the United States.

The reason publicly advanced by Weizman for wanting to leave the six-man negotiating team was that he considered it too large and cumbersome.

But the minister has made little secret of his objections to the severe limitations Begin wants to impose oo the autonomy being proposed for Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza.

The disagreement comes while Weizman is also at odds with Begin over headlong Jewish settlement on occupied Arab land.

The differences appeared so sharp that oewspapers began speculating last week on Weizman resigning from the government. But at a meeting with Begin Sunday morning Weizman apparently stopped short of this.

An official statement after the Begin-Weizman meeting shed no light on the discussion. It said:

"Mr. Begin held a talk with Mr. Weizman on several matters concerning security and political issues. Mr. Begin did oot tell Mr. Weizman that he had to carry out government policies. There was no need because Mr. Weizman was already carrying out government decisions and policies."

rejected by the court, it issued a temporary injunction against further construction work on the settlement Weizman had previously argued unavailingly in the cabinet against establishmeot of Elon Moreh, saying it was an unnecessary offeose to world opinioo at a time of delicate negotiations.

Similarly Weizmao was unhappy about the unyielding stance of Begin oo autocomy. His view has been that publication of such extremist aims at the outset of negotiations sharply reduced their chances of success.

In addition, Weizman clearly disliked having leadership of the oegotiating team placed in the hands of Interior Minister Yosef (Agencies) - More than 2,500 Vietnamese refugees determined to remain in Maleysia before resettlement in Western countries have been given a reprieve.

But the Malaysian authorities continued in their efforts to turn back to sea all new refugee boats attempting to land.

The reprieved refugees included over 500 "boat people" who vowed to fight to the death oo the beach at Kuantan rather than be put out to sea and 2,000 crowded inside beach enclosures on Tioman Island.

Fred Farrar of the FAA said Saturday night he could make oo comment on the report.

The system reportedly concerns cootrol surfaces called slats on the wings, huge metal plates on the front edge of a wing that are extended out and down from the wing during takeoff and landing to give the plane added lift at low speeds.

If the slats on one wing remain extended while those on the opposite wing retract, it can cause a plane 10 roll out of control, which is apparently what happened on the Chicago DC-10. The crash killed 273 people.

Just as the plane was lifting off, the engine and its support pylon under the left wing fell off. In the process, investigators believe, the hydraulic lines that control the slats on the left wing were severed and wind pressure pushed the slats back into the left wing.

On the right wing, the slats remained extended giving that wing a high degree of lift and causing the place to roll 107 degrees to the left and fall.

Power struggles in both parties hit Desai, Indira

Factional crises on Saturday gripped India's two major political parties, the ruling Janata Party nf Prime Minister Morarji Desai and the opposition Congress Party (I) eaded by Indira Gandhi.

In the day's must dramatic development, Raj Narain, the flamboyant political maverick who unseated Mrs. Gandhi in her own parliamentary district in the 1977 election, announced his resenation from Desar's party and bluntly accused the prime minister of authoritarianism.

Mrs. Gandhi's Congress Party (I) High Command, meanwhile. prepared tn expel from its ranks, Devaraj Urs, one of India's most powerful politicians. Urs, the chief minister of Karnataka two days ago wrote Mrs. Gandhi a scathing letter accusing her of treating him and other party leaders like domestic servants. His expulsion could come Sunday.

Foreshadowing a Congress Party split, the third since 1969. Urs, Saturday night called on all Congress members and other oliticians opposing Mrs. Gandhi to gather for a convention on July 4 at Bangalore, his state capital, to regroup democratic forces." His call strengthened predic-

But Deputy Prime Minister Charan Singh, head of Narain's Janata faction, revived charges that the faction was being discriminated against and said if this continued it would be difficult to hold the party together.

Byrd to meet Soviets on SALT ratification

WASHINGTON, June 24 (AP) - Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd announced Saturday he will fly to Moscow this week to discuss with Soviet leaders the Senate's role in ratifying SALT II. It is thought Byrd will explore possible Soviet reactinn tn amendments the Senate might attach to the treaty. Byrd reportedly plans to ask the Soviets about including in the tre-ary an explicit stipulation of the number of so-called backfire bombers the Soviets can produce each year.

U.S. officials have said privately that President Brezhnev agreed at the negotiating table in Vienna to limit the number of backfire bombers each year to 30. But that limit has not been mentioned in the treary as published by the Kremlin.

Byrd told a news conference he will leave Thursday for the Sovie Union. He said he will meet Brezhnev and other top Soviet

"I want them to have a better understanding of the Senate. The Senate does give advice and con-amendments. We're not going to vote for the treaty out of fear." He will explain to the Soviets ratification should not be seen as direct amendments to the treaty.

Byrd, who has not yet committed himself, said he is continuing to study the treaty and hopes Senate hearings next month will clear up "many of the problems that appear at the moment."

In touching on the backfire and Byrd will be dealing with a key in issue and possibly a major sticking # point - in the debate.

Critics claim the plane is capable of carrying out a nuclear strike against the United States and should therefore be included under SALT II's numerical limits on strategic weapons.

The Soviets and many U.S. military experts consider the backfire a tactical weapon that lacks the range to reach the United

GULF DIALOGUE

Relations between Iraq and Iran continue to make headlines with Tehran charging that Baghdad is smuggling weapons and men to instigate a rebellion by Iranian Arabs in Khuzestan province.

So far, Iraq has kept a relatively low profile. Except for a few editorials in the Baghdad press, Iraq has reacted mildly to the Iranian accusations in the hope that the situation will be restored to normal, and in the belief that words at this stage can only compound the problem. But, in what has become a daily ration, Iran has kept up its charges and accusations and has alienated several friends who saw in the February revolution a real chance for Iranians and Arabs to forge a lasting friendship and replace the uneasy "accomodation" that prevailed during the Shah's rule.

There is no doubt that Iran is as keen on friendship with its Arah neighbors as they are, but the incessant accusations and threats are not conducive to the dialogue necessary for this friendship, and the multitude of statements being made hy Iranian leaders on territorial issues can hardly help matters. Although such statements are usually denied by the central government as not representative of its policies, they nevertheless revive anxieties in the Arah world.

It is obvious that dialogue and sincere efforts at understanding regional problems are becoming rare virtues, and it is regrettable that they are being replaced by sensationalism and rhetoric as policy instruments. It is no secret that the Gulf region is going through delicate and highly vulnerable stage, with superpowers contemplating strike forces and counter-forces to "safeguard" the area. Regional dissent will only encourage such patronage. To say that there is full agreement and understanding between countries of the region would by hypocritical at best, hut to continue to evade the pending issues will lead to further aggravation.

The conflict between Iran and Iraq, as well as all other outstanding issues, can best be resolved at the negotiating table and not in newspapers and radios. It is time to weigh the outside threats and to rally forces to guard against these threats. To continue with a logic of confrontation will undermine the defenses of all countries in the Gulf region and will invite outside interference to determine fates and policies in the region ooce again.

Although mediation efforts by countries outside the region are commendable, there is no reason why the Gulf countries themselves cannot address their problems in a direct and open manner. No country in the area is an enemy, although the manner in which the outstanding issues are being tackled suggests that.

Problems between Iraq and Iran Kuwait and Iran — or any other Gulf countries for that matter - are not beyond solution. But such solutions must be worked out in the conference room, and it is hoped that Gulf countries will substitute logic and rationalism from defiance and threats.

Israeli obsession with militarism

By Martin Woollecott

The Israeli army is that society's major achievement. From its early days as an ill-equipped and under-trained force to its present incarnation as a huge and sophisticated military machine, it has become the institution which, above all others, has defined the inner character of Israel.

The achievement, Israelis argue, was forced upon them and they go on to claim — it has become a cliche in Israel — that their society is militarized hut not militaristic." That is a nice distinction, but in fact the range of attitudes toward the army, although wide, has this in common, that war is at the center of the national self-image. For instance, talking to Israelis of all classes, one is often surprised to find they have manipulated the conversation so they can tell war stories. Thus an academic will recall the attacks on Latrun in the 1948 war and even go to his study to produce the remant of the mortar bomb that almost killed him. Or a man will casually mention that he dropped at Mitla and "got the red backing to my paratroop wings." (sign of a combat drop.)

Or a taxi driver will embark on a long account of how, driving a truck up the Golan under heavy fire, he crashed into a ravine and hroke his pelvis. One might almost say that such Israelis were boasting hut what they really seem to be doing is defining their value - as they would to fellow Israelis - in terms of their contribution on the hattlefield. The army is with Israeli men after all, from their teens until their fifties. In the schools, sixth form boys talk endlessly about which units they will be trying for, and there is intense competition for the more elite outfits. At the Kelet, the hig recruit reception depot near Tel Aviv, there is literally a market place for military manpower. with officers of the various arms setting up stalls as a process of mutual choice and selection goes on. Signs and slogans - "the hrave to the paratroops," "the best boys for pilot training" - appeal to youthful machismo.

From Israeli writing and thinking about armies and war, there is an almost complete absence of approaches common in other countries: there is no schweik or gunner asch, there is no rejection of war. Except in the shallower senses, there is no praise of the more stolid military virtues. The men who set the pace in the Israeli military establishment are what the Americans call "gung ho" to a man.

Israeli attitudes to war run through a spectrum at one end of which is a rather cheap satisfaction with easy victories and at the other, a doom-ridden obsession with struggle and conflict. The first is well represented by the young Ezer Weizman, now minister of defense. After the ceasefire in 1948, be wrote in his autohiography: "I'd had a fruitless day. I hadn't shot down anything - Egyptian, Syrian, or British. Here I was, excluded from the festivity." So he joined the "festivity" hy leading his patrol in an attack on unsuspecting British Spitfires along the international boundary. Two British pilots were killed, continues the exuberant Weizman, and wheo he and his squadron mates got to the hars of Tel Aviv, "the story of how we shafted the RAF had already made the rounds.

The bleak tunnel vision of endless wars is shared by many Israelis of the military and political elite, in spite of the peace agreement with Egypt. Professor Mordekai Ahir, an academic with military and strategic interests, shakes his head when asked whether there will be aoother war.

'I hope not . . . " he says, "hut I'm an old suspicious man who's been here a long time and knows the troubles and difficulties of living with the Arabs. . . All my generation are infected with fatalism and distrust of our neighbors. I always look at the darkest side, perhaps, but there are those who wish to see a real peace so much that they allow it to cloud their judgement."

Israelis are drawn to peace - who wants to die? - hut they are also drawn to a romanticization of the vision of war without end. That has been articulated best hy Moshe Dayan, who in 1971, said: "Death in combat is oot the end of the fight, but its peak, and since combat is a part and at times the sum total of life, death, which is the peak of comhat, is not the destruction of life hut its fullest, most powerful expression." Earlier he had suggested that the only answer to the question of "what will be?" was: "We shall continue to

If this is not militarism - of a mystical and tragic kind, admittedly — what is? War and the army, in small ways and large ways, have thus shaped Israel's character, affecting status, politics, the family, the schools, the relationship between the sexes, and each man's evaluation of himself. It is against this psychological hackground that Israeli planning for war and peace in the next few years must be examined. The question is whether - if there is a real road to peace - Israel is psychologically capable of taking it.

But, apart from the psychological climate, it is a fact that the chance of war are also increased by an Israeli strategy that is based on the concept of successive knock-out hlows. And the withdrawal from Sinai has inevitably forced the Israeli military hack to the concept of the pre-emptive strike.

Into the confines of reduced Israeli territory will soon be squeezed an immense military organization — almost as big as the British army even before mobilization of reserves. Having absorbed the lessons of the 1973 war, it is now ready for comhat on the eastern front. Total ground manpower has been pushed up to 375,000, the tank park to 3,000, and the air force close to 600 combat aircraft. A fully mechanized infantry would now partner the tanks in battle, supported by self-propelled artillery, thus minimizing missiles losses. In the air, the same problem has been solved by equipping the aircraft with ECM to confuse missiles, and stand-off weapons with which they can hit targets out of range.

The shape of another war can already be guessed at, with the first Israeli priority the destruction of the missile "hase," the strip of territory holding launchers, and the second envelopment hattles that would involve deep advances through south Lebanon and northern Jordan. That is why Gen, Rafael Eytan, the chief of staff, insists that the Golan is militarily even more important than the Jordan heights above the Jordan Valley: It would be the pivot of such a strategy. -

The Conservatives and the Middle East and Adel Bishtawi London Burean

LONDON -

Britain's new Conservative government sees a more active role in the Middle East for itself and the European Community. And while encouraging the peace process it is taking a harder line on Israeli expansionism and is accepting its commitment to a liberated Jerusalem under U.N. resolu-

'That is certainly an important element in the discussions and we support 242 which covers it, British Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Douglas Hurd told "Arab News."

Hurd is responsible for his ministry's Middle East section and will be the architect of the new government's policy.

"We believe that if Europe can increasingly speak with one voice then our influence is greater." said Hurd pointing to last week's EEC foreign ministers' "quite strong" resolutions criticizing Israeli settlements policy on the West Bank and involvement in south Lehanon. Britain, he said, considered these "wrong" and "unhelpful."

He said the Camp David achievement "although imperfect, is worth preserving and should not he destroyed. We want to encourage the autonomy talks. Because we believe that if there were to be, and it's a big if, genuine autonomy for the Palestinians on the West Bank, then that would be another important step forward."

"Don't let's spit on the only thing which is actually happening," he added. "Increased flexibility" after Camp David." he said, "should be used to obtain an eventual settlement against the alternative of another 'no winners' war."

"We understand the criticisms of President Sadat," he said, "and would be worried if we thought there was a permanent gape open there. So we will do what we can alone, but also with our fellow Europeans, to play a useful part in widening out, and in improving, these discussions.

We will work closely with our Arab friends particularly traditional friends like the Saudi government in the hope that we can play a useful, perhaps more prominent, part than we have been able to." Initially, at least, this activity will be purely diplomatic, said Hurd.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government has quickly established contact with Middle Eastern leaders.

Since their overwhelming election victory visitors have already included Prince Salman, governor of Riyadh, Prime Minister Menahem Begin of Israel, King Hussein of Jordan and Vice President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt.

Britain's Conservatives have traditionally been considered more understanding to the Arabs than their Lahor rivals, who had Labor movement connections with Israel. Though there has been no head on policy clash and consequently no "sudden turn of policy when the Conservatives take over," said Hurd, the party has "a considerable body of experience" through various members' personal relationships with the Middle East.

Not least among these is the Foreign Secretary, Lord Carringtoo, himself. He made an extensive tour of the Middle East which included a meeting with PLO chairman Yasser Arafat. His spokesman in the House of Commons, Sir Ian Gilmour, was a founder member of the Council for the Advancement of Arab-British Understanding.

Like most of his cabinet colleagues, Hurd, 49, was educated at Eton and Oxbridge before joining the Foreign Office, with which he served in Peking, the U.N. and Rome. He was prime minister Ted Heath's private secretary in the last Tory government and opposition spokesman on Europe for Mrs. Thatcher.

The Conservatives are undoubtedly more Europeoriented than their predecessors but it remains to be seen how far this will draw them from Britain's traditionally conservative and pro-American role in the EEC on Middle East ques-

After last week's EEC resolution, the next step could be official recognition of the PLO which is favored by many of the foreign ministers. Hurd said: "We are considering our own attitudes but there is a difficulty insofar as there's been no clear statement from the PLO about the existence of Israel."

But he refused to be drawn on a trade off between recognition of the PLO for their recognition of Security Council Resolution 242 which acknowledges Israel's right to exist.

However, he stipulated a Palestinian "land" and negotiations involvement as necessary for a settlement, "We use the word land, just as the French use the word patrie, because it is m a way rather nentral. It conveys the feeling that there are people who have rights over land, over water and over their own political future which have to be respected." He felt the details should be left to the debating process between those Britain's Middle East policy, said Hurd, is based on three cards of entry: past connections, a good relationship with the U.S. and the "new element" of growing European cooperation. The last two may with time conflict as Europe establishes policies of its own. The unprecedented statements on Israel are running besides conflict on the EEC commission's refusal to move offices from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem under threat of: losing diplomatic privileges.

Pointing to the "stuck" Euro-Arah dialogue and difficulties thin the "adolescent" European political institution of gaining agreement Hurd feels strong unity is distant.

"If the situation changed, and the present talks were coming to nothing then we in Europe would have to think again very carefully from the beginning what our role should be and whether we could take some further initiative," he

"But ohviously that is something we would want to discuss with the Saudi government and all friendly governments before we do it."

Hurd stressed the importance of close contact with Saudi Arabia on oil and world economic issues as well as the general-Middle East situation and the consequences of the Iranian revolution. "Our doors are open," he said hoping for furthertwo-way visits.

Apart from this broader bilateral dialogue — and Hurd excluded a European context as yet - which started with Prince Salman's visit, there is a continual discussion on the future of the Arab Industries Organization disbanded after the Egypt-Israel peace treaty. The British military industry was to be deeply involved with Egyptian-based factories for helicopters and missiles. "It's in difficulty, but we don't despair of finding an answer which is reasonably satisfactory." said Hurd.

Gulf security, said Hurd was no longer a British concern though close friendships were retained. He said there was no vacuum and the security of the Gulf and its governments depended on their own policies. "The Shah was not after all overthrown by outside armies," he added. But he said that Oman, which has around 600 British officers some on secondment, was a "special case."

"Saudi Arabia cootinues its relentless drive to build a modern strategy for the Arab World," according to "Al-Riyadh".

"This Saudi diplomatic activity comes at a time of general agreements especially after the SALT summit in Vienna to put the Middle East question on the shelf. The question was intended to be forgotten for many years along with problems of Africa and Latin America oow that the superpowers have decided to safeguard their own interests.

"Noting this, Saudi Arabia decided to move and preveot the MiddleEast question from being relegated especially that the whole region is being subjected to vicious conspiracies to destabilize it including fomeoting trouble between Iraq and Iran, subversion in Syria, friction between Pakistan and Afghanistan and, of late, seoding Henry Kissinger back to the arena of Middle Eastern politics.

"Saudi Arabia has often warned those who prefer to work and conspire in the dark as well as those who love to play with fire. Some, particularly in Western Europe, have responded favorably. This is an encouraging trend," the paper

"Al-Bilad" said the Saudi government "is sincerely striving to help the world put its house in order through its wise oil pricing and production policy."

The paper quoted official reports which said that "production is linked to the country's policy which aims at world economic well-being."

The paper said that the rest of the world must realize that Saudi Arabia is in fact contributing effectively and in a substantial way to the prosperity of mankind and will continue to do so whether through its production or pricing policy. This is even more important because of the speculative behavior of the oil companies and other intermediaries which seek the maximum profit possible at the expense of producers and consumers alike.

In another commentary, "Al-Bilad" Discussed West German Chaocellor Helmut Schmidt's. statements to a Jewish newspaper and "his clear and loud" denunciations of Israeli policy in the occupied lands.

"This is t'.e first time in three years that Germany opeoly deplores Israeli policy and warns of a possible war in the Middle East even without Egyptian participation," the paper said and added that the German leader's warnings "should be taken seriously hy Israel as a signal of what is likely to come. "Together with the recent Common Market declaration, Schmidt's warnings mean that Israel will find itself in grave trouble if it does oot heed the voice of reason and abide by international *Schmidt's statements are a positive gesture towards the Arabs and must be fully appreciated by them. They will no doubt be of marked influence on the politics of the region and oo Israeli аттоgance which constitutes a real threat to world peace."

Commeoting on Saudi-German relations in the light of the German foreign and economics ministers visit "Al-Nadwa" said that the two countries "have grown considerably closer hecause they oow have a better understanding of each other.

"The recent European declarations on the Middle East problem. and the need to curtail the consumption of oil are also closer to the Arah way of thinking. This closeness puts Europe in a better position to have a constructive role in the peace process with a view to achieving a just and durahle settlement.

We are confident," the paper said, "that the visit will further develop bilateral relations." Discussing Europe's role in finding a solution for the Middle East problem, "Okaz" said that Europe and the United Nations "can do a great deal in this direction away from the two superpowers which are only concerned about their own problems.

"It was gratifying," the paper said," to watch the transformation of European attitude in the last few years from almost absolute support for Israel to a more realistic and even-handed policy."

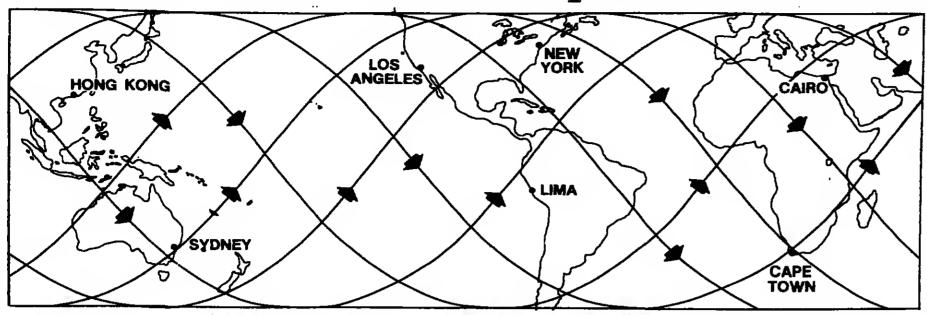

The paper said the the European effort in this direction is likely to bear fruit in conjuction with the United Nations and provided that the Arahs remain united and shed their differences which weaken their resolve.

"Israel must be faced with a strong international public opinion that would make it realize that its policy and behavior are threatening international peace and security.

Will more American space debris shower on Saudi Arabia?

Skylab's " footprint " path : NASA admits it has virtually no control over the space station's re-entry

By Bob Lebling Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON - Some time oext mooth — experts now say about July 15 — America's Skylab space statioo will drop out of orbit and come crashing to Earth.

As it falls through the atmosphere, the 79-ton vehicle will break up into hundreds of pieces, some tiny, and some weighing as much as two toos. Many of the fragments will hurn up in the atmosphere. Others, including the heavier chunks, will plummet through the atmosphere and hit the Earth's surface over a vast area of "footprint" some 7,000 kilometers long and 170 kilometers wide. Saudi Arabia is within the footprint and has already been the victim of falling litter from America's space program.

The larger pieces of Skylab — including a lead film-vault that weighs some 4,000 pounds could strike the Earth at a speed of 2,500 kilometers an hour, leaving a crater 1.25 kilometers across. As "The New York Times" put it in a recent article. Skylah's reentry "promises to be the most spectacular and the most dangerous in the 22 years since the first space satellite was placed into

The question people around the world are asking now is, "Where will Skylab hit?" America's National Aeronautics and Space Administratioo (NASA) says it doesn't know. NASA admits it has virtually no control over the space station's re-entry, and there is oo guarantee Skylab won't come down over a heavily populated area --- say New York City or Paris or Cairo.

It is NASA's hope that the debris from Skylab will crash into the sea. There is a 75 per cent chance of this happening, since three-quarters of the Earth's surface is covered by ocean.

But any land masses between 50 degrees North latitude and 50 degrees South are fair game for the Skylah "footprint" — including all the countries of the Middle

Although NASA says the chances of anyone being injured or killed by falling Skylab dehris are one in 150, the Carter Administration is concerned enough about the potential for catastrophe that it has ordered NASA, the Peotagon and the State Department to assemble emergeocy teams of medical, technical and legal specialists -- to be dispatched anywhere in the: world in the event Skylah hits a populated area.

If Skylab comes down over the Middle East, it would oot be the first time the region fell victim to space debris.

According to the North American Air Defense Command (NORAD) - which keeps a coostant watch on all orbiting objects, from lost astronauts' gloves to Russiao spy satellites — a space fragmeot crashed in Saudi Arahia in September 1967.

U.S. authorities identified the fragment — a spherical pressure vessel about 0.6 meters across as part of a Delta rocket booster used to launch an Explorer satellite in July of that year.

There were oo injuries

"If we see that Skylab is going to all along a track that would take it over heavily populated areas, we would try to delay re-cotry for two or three revolutions so that the re-entry track would be over less populous areas," NASA said. Re-cotry could be delayed up to four hours by re-orienting the space station to reduce its drag in the upper atmosphere. But NASA admits it does not know whether the small thruster rockets on Skylab have enough fuel 10 accomplish the maneover.

The space ageocy is also wor-ried aboot the possibility that Skylab might "skip" or bounce off the upper atmosphere as it reeoters- much as a flat stone skips across a pood wheo it is hurled over the water.

Encounters and excursions from a houseboat in Kashmir...

SRINAGAR, Kashmir - Just outside the airport gates, the vegetation really begins in rows of oriental plane trees - huge and civic and bumane as stone Presidents — and banks of irises that crown bends in the road or struggle up between the masonry of collapsed temples.

It is disorienting at first, and for a traveller from leddah, rather atrocious. And if he comes in spring, which he is likely to do, he will also be astonished by water

So great is the mass of the mountain system that it draws all liquids towards it like the moon and gives them out again in torrential hurns, over patchworks of paddy fields, in the great coils of the Jhelum that appear suddenly beyond them and in the string of lakes that have made Kashmir

The light is more liquid than Venice and is never quite the same from one moment to the next. And the weather is so intensely local that a man can follow a thunderstorm from the Isle of Chenars across the lake withoout ever getting wet.

If the traveller is English, this strangeness will be all the stranger for a piercing streak of familiarity. The English, though they actually ruled the place for only a week in 1846, have left a spoor as strong as that of the Indians, who never have - in theory. The taste of the English suburbs still throbs from Houseboat owner Ahdoo Gosani the handicafts, from the furnishings of houseboats and the architecture of Srinagar, It persists like the bloodstain in " The Canterville Ghost" - green, blue or yellow, but still recongnizable.

Like all towns built on water, Srinagar is a confusing place. There is a hill nearby, Takht-i-Suleiman or Shanadakrya, which divides the Jhelum from the lakes and rises about 150 meters from the valley floor. It is a steep climb, heavily planted with white laburnum and strongly scented lilac, and crowned on its summit by a little Hindu temple, much restored and generously elec-trified by the Maharaja of Mysore, during a goodwill visit in 1924.

The proportions of the view are as perfect, and suspicions, as a watercolor. To the south, the foreground slopes away through pink and white fruit trees, past clumps of willows on the valley bottom, light green wheatfields and rice paddies and placid reaches of river full of boats, to rise toward the walls of the Pir Panjal. To the northwest, the eye crosses a chaos of flood-canals. past the polo ground and the Residency park to Hari Parbhat, with its ruined fort, almond blossom and gambolling lunatics in their red pyjamas. At its feet, the smoke of a thousand cooking fires obscures the old town, like artillery fire elouding a distant battlefield.

To the north, the ground falls sharply to the shore of Dal Lake, which sweeps round in a fine freehand curve as grand avenues of Mughal chenars march down to meet it. Beyond is the sheet of Nagin and the mouths of the steep glens that drain the Himalaya, and above them, 3,000 meters above the valley and 5,000 above the sea, the peak of Haramokh, the presiding genius of Kashmir. Its summit will be lost in a violet haze, but somewhere north of that are the ceasefire lines and the Indus valley, and God knows what chaos of glacier and rock before " that There too is Mr. Butt.

shyest of mountains" — K 2. But the eye keeps returning to the lakes, for are are Kashmir's chief attraction and have been so since the Mughal emperors first laid out their gardens or, two centuries later, Gulab Singh collaborated with the English to betray Sikh power in Lahore and gain the valley for his own. Of the two that girdle Srinagar, Dal is the larger and Nagin is the quieter, but both are as still and elear as a mirror, relics of a period when the whole valley lay under water.

They are extremely shallow, perhaps a meter in most places, and choked with dickweed and the tendrils of the lotus plant that covers the surface with flowers in June. There are fish too, ringed carp of a sort, which respond to gentle dabbing with bits of mut-ton. But this is best tried in the narrow channels between the market gardens of Dal, for out on the late there are kingfishers silk blue and taffeta grey - and wheeling fish eagles for competi-

If you have escaped the crush of the airport still uncommitted, a pleasant day can be had touring the lakes in a paddle-boat shikara judging the merits of site and plumbing of each. Or you can opt for dry land and the Bombay Rotarians of Nedou's - caterer to Viceroys and the spectacular views and impertinent waiters of the Oberoi. Noise travels far in the clear air. Dal is a place of chatter, car-horns and endless Urdu film tunes.

On the northern shore of Dal is the great white mosque of Hazratbal, built by Sheikh Abdullah Khasmir's chief minister, and a charitable trust to house a purposed hair of the Holy Prophet's head. If you come by Hazratbal on Friday, the reach will be choked with boatloads of villagers bringing their wives to the Friday prayer and their produce to the Friday bazar. But beyond that, away from the noise, in the shade of a mighty chenar that seems to have walked out of the nearby Mughal garden, you will find Mr. Butt, conducting business from an iron bedstead.

Mr. Butt - actually Hajji G.M. Butt, for the last world war brought prosperity and be made the Pilgrimage in 1946 - is the doyen of the bouseboat class or khanjis. He is rich and rather cosmopolitan, for he is much favored by ambassadors. As you lunch aboard, dusty photographs reflect the contented stares of J.K. Galbraith, Ellsworth Bunker and other heroes, their accompanying testimonials attesting the excellence of the Butt regime.

His houseboats are as opulent as even Mr. Major's "Flying Peony" on Nagin and are fenced off from hawkers. Mr. Butt himself is very old, but contented most likely over a marriage - for the khanjis marry only among themselves.

"Golden Rose" kidnaps its daughter back by night and stealth. The next night, " California" counter-attacks with a shikara-posse of uncles and there are ploody noses and splashes and subdued shouting - for nothing must distrub the guests. Then the summer comes, business picks up. someone may knot carpets awhile in Srinagar jail and the feud sub-. sides for the year.

Once you have selected one of these characters, you are committed to him, perhaps even for life. For visitors bave a habit of returning to Kashmir. In return, he will arrange excursions, fight with Indian Airlines and the Fisheries Department, transport and supervise you, and isolate you from the pasty and dangerous and, above all, from other houseboat wallahs.

The Kashmiri genius, if it is not for copying, is for providing. They will provide anything from gladioli to morphine in a vast network of commission that extends from Delhi to the ceasefire lines. No money changes hands. But as you drive to the airport, you will receive a monstrous hill, riddled with commission, bribes, licenses, fines and surcharges. And it won't be until the last flight call that both parties will be satisfied.

Srinagar offers so many diversions that many say it is spoilt. It probably is. Younghusband, who lived there as resident, said it was in 1908 and since then tongues of development - spearheaded by Abdullah - have licked along the shores of Dai, Mr. Oberoi has opened his hotel and Swiss-style chalcts clutter the hill between the Mughal gardens.

But, Younghusband asked, surely even Moorcroft, the second European and first Englishman to see Kashmir, "must have often pined for a decent dinner - and, who knows, for a game of golf?" There is golf now, at Guinnerg in the shadow of Nanga Parbut, and refractory hacks for riding and water-skiing on Nagin and snow-skiing at Pahlgam. Apart from the gardens, favorite picuic spots for the people of the town and the drunken Sikh soldiery quartered in it, there are excursions to the cerie lakes of Wular and Gangarbal and to the rambling remains of Hindu and Buddhist temples. Of these, Martand to the southeast occupies the finest site for worship in the world. Here, on a green meadow beneath the pass to lower Ladakh, the style that begins in Basibek and Palmyra ends its eastward journey in a final lonely exuberance. G.T. Vigne, the best writer about Kashmir, but as proprietary as any other visitor, thought it would do nicely for a racecourse.

The streams — Sindh, Erin, Bringhi and Lidder - are very fast, cold and clear, Brown and rainbow trout were introduced 80 years ago and have done well. But the icy water makes them drowsy and they like sunlight as no other trout oo earth.

They will take a fly put to them, however inexpertly, and there are gillies to help. But ooce hooked, the trout fight without cooviction as if they do not yet feel quite at home in their cold bright world. A circle of children will watch you fish all day and, behind them, a crows. Enormous mountain eagles, not the jumped-up kites of Dal, blot out the sun.

In spring, the snow water is unpredictable and a day's flyfishing can turn into a dreary and illegal day's worming. At times like that, it is best to climb up above the deodars and starveling villages toward the snow line. Here saxifrages and strawberries sprout among patches of ice and here, if you go where animals and people don't, you will find the Himalayan Blue Poppy.

Then there is Srinagar itself, First, the bazar. Unlike Kabul or Tehran, it cannot be said to be cosmopolitan. Goods from India must be trucked over the Pir Panjal and are not cheap. And there is dress circle of fat, black carrioo no trading contact with Ceotral Asia — it took three generations of explorers battering themselves against the Karakorams to find that out.

There remaios what Kashmir produces itself. Excellent silk is cultivated on mulberry trees in the valley and woven ioto oldfashioned georgette and crepe on antique French looms. There are long-haired carpets of dubious hue and painted papier-mache of slight workmanship. And there are the famous Kashmir shawls.

The Kashmir famine of 1877 and changes in European taste after the Franco-Prussian War interrupted the tradition, and the modern shawls lack conviction unless they be plain in color and of the very fine weaves known by the Shah Tush. These are made from the very soft wool underlying the long hair of the Tibetan goat. But Chinese inroads into the goat's habitat in Ladakh have cut down oo the supply reaching the Srinagar looms and the shawls are extremely expensive.

There is also what comes out of Ladakh; brilliantly worked silver and gold vessels and statuary, bought or plundered from Buddhist monasteries. For a oon-Indian, this is a legal and moral twilight and acquaintaoce with the museum curator, the febrile Mr. Mokhodomy, and the Pandit who runs the Srinagar customs, will oot inevitably be to your advantage.

The trade is doomed anyway as far as Srinagar is concerned, according to Ghulam Rasool, a leading trader in Tibetan works of art. This spring, Indian Airlines opened a weekly flight to Leh, the chief town of Ladakh, and Rasool gloomily predicts that the slick dealers from Londoo and Los Angeles will go straight there. Rasool, like all the other mer chants from Abdullah downwards, is waiting for credit to improve before moving into real estate. For Kashmir's future, if it has one, is tourism.

If you stand oo the last bridge over the Jhelum and look upstream, Srinagar will look like Henley-on-Thames, expecially if the G.M. Tyndall-Biscoe Memorial School is preparing for its annual regratta. But if you turn downstream, it looks like oo other place oo earth.

Massed up on either side of the broad river are hanks of rickety wooden bouses, mosques, temples, balconied shops, some large, some small and some leaning to one side and some with earth roofs sprouting streaked, bloody tulips. At night it prescots a different aspect. For the Srinagaris possess their town only at nightfall.

A shower or a lost paddle may delay yoo on Nagin and you must return through the old town, down a shallow canal recking of ordure. Your progress will be slow, twisting and turning between rotten cliffs of buildings, past huge barges full of fruit and timber going to Calcutta or sullen, rickety children going nowhere. And it will be quiet except for the clatter of washerwomeo oo the canal steps and the toneless whistle that warns oncoming boats. It is not the quiet of desuctude or exhaustion found elsewhere in the valley, but a brooding, overpopulated sil-

W. Indies bury England by 92 runs

LONDON, June 24 (R) — The West Indies retained the World Cup at Lords here Saturday suffocating England's hopes under a towering total of 286 for nine after being put into bat.

PISCATAWAY, New Jersey, June 24 (AP) - U.S. middledistance star Don Paige upset John Walker of New Zealand in the mile at the inaugural New Jersey Olympic Track classic Saturday.

Paige, winner of the 800-and 1,500-meter U.S. collegiate titles earlier this month, turned in a personal best of 3 minutes, 54.6 seconds. He overtook the 27-yearold Walker, the world record holder in the mile and 1976 Olympic 1,500-meter champion, at the bead of the stretch and poured it on for a convincing victory.

Spain may ration gasoline

MADRID. June 24 (R) — Spain may introduce gasoline rationing if consumption is not reduced significantly. The Madrid newspaper "El Pais" said Sunday. The government had drawn up an energysaving plan aimed at reducing a rise in oil consumption of more than 11.5 per cent in the first five months of this year. A sharp increase in oil prices is planned for next munth and some service stations will be closed from next September. If these measures fail in cut consumption significantly, rationing would be introduced around November.

Calls for replacement

OAS wants Somoza to go

WASHINGTON, June 24 (R) - The Organization of American States (OAS) Friday night passed a resolution calling for the immediate replacement of Nicaraguan President Anastasio

The resolution, adopted at a meeting of OAS foreign ministers by 17 votes to two, dropped a U.S. proposal made earlier to send an inter-American peacekeeping force to the embattled country.

Instead it proposed the "immediate and definitive" replacement of the Somoza government and the installation of a democratic government, including the main opposition groups.

The compromise resolution did not spell out exactly what OAS strong opposition during the nations should do with respect to the Nicaraguan crisis. It urged member states "to take steps to facilitate an enduring and peaceful solution of the Nicaraguan problem..." It added that the principle of non-intervention should he scrupulously observed.

Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the United States was pleased to back the resolution, even though it was not as specific as Washington wanted.

Nicaragua and Paraguay voted against the resolution. Chile, Uruguay, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador abstained.

The American proposal for a peacekeeping force ran into

Nicaragua troops bombard Sandinista slum positions

MANAGUA, June 24 (R) — The Nicaraguan government radio told civilians Saturday to abandon their houses in Managua's northeast slnms held by Sandinista guerrillas as the army launched a huge bombardment against rebel positions.

A steady flow refugees streamed south from the city Saturday evening as intense mortar fire and bombing struck the slum suhurbs. Many were crowded into overloaded trucks. Others trudged away from the city carrying boxes of food on their heads.

Red Cross officials were looking after 80,000 refugees from Managua in makeshift tents.

The national radio repeatedly warned the population Saturday night of imminent air attacks on the Sandinistas, It also called on them to drop their weapons and surrender, saying their lives would

People living eight kilometers from the targets said their houses were shaken by the bombs dropped by helicopters and by artillery

They said it was the heaviest attack since the Sandinistas began their assault on Managua three weeks ago. The National Guard has recently gained ground against the guer-rillas in the capital. But the Sandinistas still held vital areas of the north and south.

Military sources said it appeared that guerrillas had been slipping-out of the Managua suburbs and joining other forces for further attacks on Managua. It was estimated that President Somoza had committed about

1,100 men to attacks on the barrios, where the Sandinistas have strong support, and about 400 or 500 men to a defensive line near the Costa Rican border. The bombs dropped on Managua apparently weighed more than 200 pounds each.

People huddled around short-wave radios to listen to the broadcast of the OAS debate on Nicaragua, Nicaraguan radio stations have been censored for several weeks and did not carry any immediate word on the vote.

Red Cross Director Miguel Schiebel said the food situation is becoming desperate at the Red Cross centers in Mangua, where 80,000 people have sought shelter. "The hunger is scandalous. There's just no way to feed them," he

He estimated that 20 tons of rice, beans and corn were needed daily and that only about 40 per cent of the demand was being

Friday night's resolution urged that free elections be held as soon as possible to establish "a truly democratic government that guarantees peace, freedom, and justice."

The resolution did not spell out which opposition groups should he represented in a new Nicaraguan government. No mention was made either of the Sandinista guerrillas or President Somoza's National Liberal Party.

The resolution was worked out Thursday night and Friday.

The meeting was called because of new hattles between Nicaraguan government forces and Sandinista rebels, who have been fighting to overthrow President Somoza.

The president has rejected the U.S. proposal that he surrender power to an interim government saying this was really an attempt to overthrow him.

The "Washington Post" said that in a telephone interview the president indicated he was relying on a split among his opponents to prevent passage of the substitute proposal through the OAS.

Left Behind

In a last-minute change of plans, President Carter's National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski was left behind to deal with the Nicaraguan crisis as the president and other aides left on Saturday for Tokyo.

Brzezinki, who had been listed as part of the official party only hours before the departure, staved in the capital to oversee U.S. efforts to encourage an OAS initiative in Nicaragua.

Asked whether the situation was getting worse, Brzezinski said, "No. But it is going on ... somebody has to preside over the National Security Council."

Brzezinski stood next to Carter and Vance while the president read a departure statement on the south lawn of the White House but as the official party boarded a marine belicopter for the flight to Andrews Air Force Base. Brzezinski walked back toward the White House.

He told reporters he shoped to join Carter in Tokyo on Tuesday, possibly traveling with Defense Secretary Harold Brown.

In Salisbury, the "Sunday Mail" said Sunday Muzorewa's government is to retain local press censorship indefinitely.

Information Minister Silas Mundawarara and his deputy. Ishmail Adam, were quoted as saying that domestic media would continue to be prevented from reporting on unspecified strategic, economic and military matters.

"I don't like consorship and I don't think anyone likes it." Mundawarara said.

Both the minister and his deputy predicted that the restrictions, confined to local publications, radio and television, would probably be lifted once sanctions and the guerrilla war ended.

Germany's high rate of economic growth for 1979 was in accordance with an agreement reached last year at the seven-nation economic summit meeting in Bonn, where the United States and others urged Germany to accelerate its growth in order to help pull the world's industrial economy out of a prolonged slump.

In Paris, meanwhile, OPEC's president said the oil price increase to decided this week in Geneva will be "reasonable" and will not harm the world economy.

Mana Said al-Oteiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, said in an interview with the French news agency Agence France-Presse that he could not indicate exactly what the new price of Arabian Light crude would be.

The current price is $14.54 per barrel. There has been speculation that oil ministers will hike the price to as much as $20 per barrel at the Geneva meeting.
